Andy Wood was the enigmatic frontman of Mother Love Bone, a band that emerged from the Seattle music scene in the late 1980s and is widely credited with helping to lay the groundwork for the grunge movement.

Wood was a charismatic performer with a powerful voice and a knack for writing catchy melodies. He was also a troubled soul, struggling with addiction and mental health issues. In 1990, just as Mother Love Bone was on the cusp of mainstream success, Wood died of a heroin overdose.

Andy Wood: To Live, Die, and Shine in Pre-Grunge Seattle is the first comprehensive biography of Wood. It tells the story of his life and career, from his early days as a musician in Seattle to his rise to fame with Mother Love Bone. The book also explores Wood's personal struggles and the impact of his death on the Seattle music scene.

The book is written by Greg Prato, a music journalist who has written for Rolling Stone, Billboard, and other publications. Prato interviewed Wood's family, friends, and bandmates to provide a firsthand account of his life and death.

Andy Wood: To Live, Die, and Shine in Pre-Grunge Seattle is a fascinating and moving portrait of a talented musician who left a lasting legacy on the Seattle music scene. The book is a must-read for fans of Mother Love Bone and grunge music, as well as anyone interested in the history of rock music.
